The TFWP is a Canadian immigration option that allows individuals who are neither a Canadian citizen nor a permanent resident to work in Canada in positions that are facing labour shortages and are unfilled by Canadians. At the time the program was created, it was only open to live-in caregivers and agricultural workers, but the program has expanded significantly and is now an option for a wide variety of high skilled and low skilled positions. Providing the right documentation goes far beyond the minimum requirements of Canada.

These programs usually last for two year though semi-skilled workers are current liable to get 48month visas. Advantages to Employers: For employers who have been unable to recruit Canadian citizens or permanent residents for job openings, the TFWP makes it possible to hire workers from abroad. Before Canadian employers can employ temporary foreign workers, they are often required to obtain a 'Labour Market Impact Assessment (LMIA). The foreign worker will then send a copy of the LMIA when applying for his work permit. Application will be assessed based on the merits of your project or intended goal and whether or not an officer is satisfied that your contribution to Canada is a worthy enough one to allow you the authorization to immigrate in Canada.
